Production workers scurried through the fourth-floor hallway of Studio 56 lofts at Town Center on Friday as crew members shot scenes establishing the plot of a film set for release next spring.

"The Bill Collector," a comedy starring Gary Moore and tough-guy character actor Danny Trejo, is being filmed at locations across Hampton Roads through early next month. Crew and cast members are shooting most of the movie in Norfolk, where the film is set, said second assistant director Julie McCoy.

The movie is written and directed by Cristobal Krusen, who also is president of Messenger Films, the company producing "The Bill Collector." He is a former writer and director for Christian Broadcasting Network productions in Virginia Beach, and his ties to CBN and Regent University were strong factors in the decision to film the $200,000 budget project in Hampton Roads, McCoy said.

A Studio 56 loft was used as the home of Lorenzo Adams, the collections agency manager played by Moore, and crew members staged equipment in an adjacent unit. The scenes shot on Friday captured the movie's plot, with loan shark Frankie Gutierrez, played by Trejo, giving Adams a deadline to pay his debts.

Filming is scheduled to end Nov. 7, and officials will then begin seeking a distributor for a release in theaters, McCoy said.

Lenny Walsh, a Regent University junior, was one of several students volunteering as a production assistant. His duties? "Whatever they want," he said, standing in the hall as crews began to shoot another scene.
